

Call for Papers

IR*reflect - Student Journal of International Relations

Publish your term paper | Benefit from a peer-review process | Participate in academic debates among students

We are looking forward to two kinds of submissions.

Option 1: An academic paper, written, for instance, in a course at University, privately, or as a Bachelor thesis that has been improved according to the criteria listed below. These papers run through a double blind peer review process.

Option 2: An 'I reflect' piece that is shorter and includes your own opinion on an issue. This could be a book review, a conference report, or your take on the news.

Option 1: Academic Article

Main criteria:

- Develop your paper into an academic article
- The article's topic relates to the field of International Relations
- At the time of writing, you are at least in your fifth B.A. semester

Formal criteria:

- Approximately 5000 words excluding references, etc.
- Not older than two years
- Written in German or English
- Includes an abstract of about 100-150 words and five keywords
- Times New Roman, Font size 12, 1 ½ line spacing, margins 2,5 cm
- Cover page includes title, author, study program, university, semester and seminar in which the paper has been written
- Citation style 'Harvard', the use of a reference management system, such as Citavi or EndNote is highly appreciated, please also hand in the project file
- Word file (no pdfs)
- Hand in two versions of your contribution: open version with all your information and an anonymised version (all information on the cover page and all references in the text that could hint to the author are erased)

Option 2: Opinion piece – I reflect –

The section 'I reflect' includes book reviews, conference reports and discussion pieces. They should not be longer than 1000 words and should focus on current issues. Please include three keywords.

Note: Previously submitted papers that have not yet been published are welcome to be submitted and reviewed again.

Submission:

- Until October 20th, 2016 to board@ireflect-journal.de
- Articles not in line with formal criteria cannot be considered
- In case of questions of any nature, feel free to contact us!

We are looking forward to your contribution!
